UK supermarkets recall cooked chicken in salmonella scare

Sandwiches and wraps from Tesco, Sainsbury's, Waitrose and Aldi are among products to be removed

More than 100 products containing cooked chicken –have been removed from sale after a salmonella scare at a major supplier.

Cranswick Country Foods said it had asked its customers to remove all their products containing its ready-to-eat chicken produced during a particular period after “a routine internal inspection” identified the presence of salmonella on a “limited number” of such products at its poultry processing plant in Hull.

Items from Tesco's store chain, as well as Starbucks, Costa and Amazon are also among those potentially contaminated. The sandwich-maker Greencore said it was “moving quickly to alternative sources of supply in order to minimise any potential shortfall of products that may be affected”.

“We are conducting a thorough investigation into the possible cause of the contamination and the site will remain closed until the investigations are complete,” the company said.
